FINDIT – HTX

1. Venture Overview

Explains the concept, mission, one-stop-shop approach, and how the app eliminates the need to visit multiple properties or locations just to gather information.

2. Users & Features

Details the needs of apartment locators, realtors, wholesale real-estate professionals, investors, commercial brokers, service providers, property managers, and owners.

3. Membership Pricing

Proposes five annual membership tiers, from $99 to $2,499, with different access levels for individual professionals, teams, and enterprise customers.

4. Revenue Scenarios

Includes conservative, base, and growth scenarios with formulas that automatically calculate projected annual membership revenue.

5. Investment Case

Outlines recurring revenue, time savings, scalability, competitive advantages, business risks, and ways to validate demand before investing heavily.

6. Launch Roadmap

Provides a phased plan for researching customers, securing listing sources, building the app, testing paid memberships, and expanding into new markets.

Proposed yearly membership structure

Membership	Annual fee	Target customer
Starter / Explorer	$99	Occasional users
Professional	$249	Individual locators, realtors, wholesalers
Power User	$399	High-volume professionals and investors
Team / Office	$999	Brokerages and professional teams
Enterprise / Portfolio	$2,499	Large companies, property managers, and investment groups

These are starting proposals, not validated market prices. The workbook allows you to adjust membership counts and see how those changes affect projected revenue.

Why I believe the concept has investment potential

The biggest opportunity is not simply creating another property-search app. It's creating a centralized availability and opportunity platform that saves professionals time and makes information easier to access, compare, and share.

- Convenience: Users can search from anywhere instead of driving to multiple properties or calling different businesses.
- Recurring income: Annual memberships can create predictable revenue when the platform delivers ongoing value.
- Professional reach: Members can share listings, availability, and opportunities with clients, partners, and teams remotely.
- Scalability: Once the platform works in one market, the business can expand into additional markets and categories.
- Business partnerships: Property owners, management companies, and other providers could pay for listing management tools, analytics, or clearly labeled promotional placement.

The most important factor will be keeping availability accurate and current. I would recommend starting with one market and a focused user group, proving that customers will pay for the service, and then expanding.

Position Find It as a professional membership platform—not just a directory. The goal is to make it a tool that professionals rely on throughout their workday, which gives them a stronger reason to renew every year.
